
Get expectations out in the open. Once.

A simple, one-page guide to aligning expectations with your partner and families before decisions become conflicts.

What you'll get:

A practical guide for one conversation that prevents many misunderstandings down the road.

- A clear structure for discussing expectations
- Important questions to address before making decisions
- A simple format to document what you agree on
- One page. No fluff. Instantly usable.

How to Use This Guide

Schedule 30 minutes with your partner. Go through each section together. Write down what you agree on. Keep it simple. The goal is clarity, not perfection.

Key Questions to Discuss

- What does "simple" mean to each of us?
- What are our non-negotiables?
- Who makes decisions about what?
- How do we handle family expectations?
- What's our budget reality vs. our budget ideal?

Document What You Agree On

After your conversation, write down:

- Three things you both agree are most important
- One thing each of you needs the other to understand
- How you'll make decisions when you disagree

Remember: This isn't about planning every detail. It's about aligning expectations so that when decisions come up, you're already on the same page.
